What Has the Government Done Against Slavery?

Hon. Henry Wilson, Senator from Massachusetts, in a late speech thus summed up the action of the present Administration against Slavery:

"They have emancipated 3,000 slaves in the District of Columbia."

They have abolished the slave code in that District; abolished the pro-slavery courts there, and established another in which the colored people of the District are admitted to all rights and privileges enjoyed by any.

They have established a High School for colored children in that District.

They have forever prohibited slavery and established permanent freedom in all the Territories of the United States.

They have passed the Homestead law, one of the strongest movements in favor of freedom.

They have established it as a settled rule of the Government that no officer may surrender a slave, nor assume any person to be a slave.

They have confiscated the slaves of rebels.

They have settled that rebels are to take no advantage by the Fugitive Slave law.

They have commenced the raising of negro regiments for the army.

Their enrollment act (commonly called the Conscription Act) puts black and white people on the same footing.

They have recognized Hayti and Liberia, and formed an alliance with them.

They have formed a treaty with England, establishing a mutual right of search in opposition to the slave trade.

They have passed several laws of death upon a slave trader, and executed it.

On September 23d, 1862, they proclaimed prospective emancipation to the slaves of rebels.

On the first of January, 1863, they proclaimed the actual freedom of 3,000,000 slaves.

"GREENBACKS" IN RICHMOND. According to a statement made by Sergeant Charles G. Frazer, a paroled prisoner of the 2d Delaware regiment, lately from Richmond, the demand for the national paper currency there is very pressing. When asked concerning this matter he said:

"Every few days a man with a heavy beard, who looked just like an old politician, would come over with a basket containing several hundred dollars' worth of quarter dollars and gold pieces for the purpose of exchanging them for greenbacks. The rates were as follows: Four dollars in specie for a five dollar greenback, or eighteen dollars in specie for a twenty dollar greenback. He asked the man one morning why it was he desired to buy greenbacks at such a high rate, as it was about the same price they brought in the North. 'Oh,' said he, 'Jeff's going up, you know, pretty soon, but' added he, 'you mustn't mind what I say—I'm one of the commissioners.' Not a loaf of bread, or the most trifling thing could be purchased without payment being demanded in greenback currency.

The excitement about greenbacks, which the Richmond Enquirer referred to a few days since, he says, does not begin to describe the reality. Nothing but greenbacks, greenbacks, is the cry, if anything else is offered in payment to the peddlers, small shopkeepers and others with whom they had a chance to deal."

"Buy me and I'll do you good." Health and Strength secured by the use of his great spring and summer medicine.
